To make use of this information, we constructed a simple model that takes as input a set of observed features (e.g., a patient's age, blood pressure, etc.) and outputs a probability of having a disease. We used this model to predict the probability of a patient having a disease, given a set of observed features. We found that the model was able to predict the probability of a patient having a disease, given a set of observed features, with a high degree of accuracy.
